

A GUIDED SELF-AUDIT WORKBOOK · BY JAIMIE K

YOU LEFT YOURSELF OUT

Now it's time to put yourself back in.

For the woman in the messy middle. The one whose life has stopped looking like her. The map. The protocol. The way back in.

BEFORE YOU START

You're not here because you forgot who you are. You're here because you built a life around the version of you that didn't know any better yet. And now the life doesn't fit.

You did everything you were supposed to do. Built the life, played the roles, kept going, held it together. And somewhere along the way you stopped feeling connected to the woman living it. Now it feels blah. You're performing instead of participating.

This isn't more inner work. You've done inner work. You've read the books, sat with the feelings, grown. That part is handled.

What hasn't been handled is the actual life. The roles. The schedule. The relationships. The work. The way you show up and speak. Those things were built by earlier versions of you, and they sit exactly where you built them until you go back in and move them.

That's what this workbook is. Going back in. Moving things.

This guide is for noticing where your life no longer fits. It is not therapy, medical care, or a substitute for professional support. If what you are dealing with includes abuse, immediate safety concerns, addiction, trauma, depression, or a mental-health crisis, use this guide alongside appropriate professional support, not instead of it.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This is a 7-day guided self-audit.

You are not meant to finish it in one sitting.

Day 1:

Read Part One. Complete the ten-minute diagnostic. Circle the places that feel least like you.

Days 2 to 5:

Read Part Two. Look at one area of your life at a time. Complete The Receipts and build your Misalignment Map.

Day 6:

Read Part Three. Pick one small move. Do it within 48 hours.

Day 7 and after:

Read Part Four after you have held the move for at least a week. Use the 30-Day Check to keep the map current.

You finish this guide when one thing in your actual life has changed. Not a reinvention. Not a new you. One specific thing you can point to and say: that's mine now.

BY THE END OF THIS GUIDE, YOU WILL HAVE:

- The areas of your life that feel least like you.
- A completed Misalignment Map.
- A clearer sense of what is yours and what was handed to you.
- One small move you can make in real life.
- A way to check new advice before you build it into your life.

ONE THING BEFORE WE START.

This isn't for everyone, and I'd rather you know now than on page 20.

If you're looking for a morning routine, a manifestation practice, or the next self-improvement plan to install, this will frustrate the hell out of you. This book removes. It doesn't add.

This is for the woman who's done renting her life from everyone else's expectations. Who's ready to find out which parts of the life she built are actually hers.

If that's you, keep going.

CONTENTS

PART ONE — SEE IT

- 01. You didn't lose yourself. You left yourself out.
- 02. How the misfit actually happened.
- 03. The seven places it shows up.
- 04. Where you are right now.

PART TWO — FIND IT

- 05. Your voice vs. the voice you learned.
- 06. The receipts.
- 07. The Misalignment Map.

PART THREE — MOVE IT

One Real Example

- 08. Thinking about it won't move it.
- 09. The one-move method.
- 10. When 'you' feels blurry.

PART FOUR — STAY IN IT

- 11. When you slip back into performing.
- 12. The 30-day check.
- 13. When advice tries to pull you out.
- 14. The standard going forward.

WORKSHEETS

The Diagnostic · The Receipts · The Misalignment Map · The One-Move Protocol · The 30-Day Check ·
The Advice Filter

You didn't lose yourself. You left yourself out.

Here's what actually happened.

You built a life. You didn't know much yet, so you did what every smart woman does. You watched. You learned. You became who each season required. The good daughter. The reliable one. The wife. The mom. The one who holds it together.

And honestly? It kind of worked. You built the life. Checked the boxes. People are proud of you.

Then something shifted. You grew. Not in the surface way. The real way. You got clearer on what you actually think, what you actually want, how you actually want to live. You became more yourself.

But your life didn't move with you.

The life is still shaped by the version of you that didn't know any better yet. The roles are her roles. The schedule is her schedule. The way you answer 'how are you' is the answer you learned to give. There's a name for this gap. Identity Lag. You changed first. Your life hasn't caught up yet.

You walk through your own days and feel a small flinch. You look at your calendar and don't fully recognize the woman it was built for. That's the misfit.

It's not in your head. It's not a confidence issue. It's not because you haven't done enough inner work. You built a life around yourself instead of with yourself.

This is not a mindset problem. It's a structure problem. The foundation is you.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

If you drew your life on a piece of paper right now. Every role. Every commitment. Your week. Your closest people. The way you spend a Saturday. Would that drawing look like you? Don't answer fast. Sit with it. Most women pause here. That pause is the reason you bought this.

How the misfit actually happened.

Nobody planned this. You didn't make a wrong turn. You did what every honest, capable, willing-to-show-up woman does when she builds a life with no roadmap.

You absorbed.

From your mother. From your marriage. From the church, the town, the friend group, the job. From who you had to be at 25. None of it was bad. It worked for the people who handed it to you. It worked the way it was designed to work.

The thing nobody told you is that other people's blueprints become your foundation if you let them. You absorb them. You build on top of them. You forget you absorbed them. Twenty years later you can't tell which parts of your life you actually chose and which parts you inherited.

That's how the misfit happens. Not through one bad decision. Through a thousand small ones that made sense at the time.

The other thing nobody told you is that the inner work won't fix this. You assumed it would. You thought if you healed enough, the life would follow.

It didn't follow. Lives don't follow. A life is a structure. Structures don't change because you became someone new internally. They change when you go in and move the pieces.

That's not a healing problem. That's a structure problem. You don't fix a structure with more journaling. You fix it by looking at it and changing what's there.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

What's one thing you do, one role you play, or one rule you live by that you've never actually re-examined? The thing you do because someone you trusted handed it to you?

The seven places it shows up.

Misalignment doesn't live everywhere. It lives in specific places. We're not rebuilding your whole life. We're finding the places that aren't you.

There are seven of them. These are the seven areas we're going to scan.

- 1. Roles. Who you are to everyone else. And where you went in the process.
- 2. Schedule. Whose life your days are actually built around. Check before you answer.
- 3. Home. Your space knows which version of you lives there. Look around.
- 4. Relationships. Some of these fit the woman you were. Not the one reading this.
- 5. Work. What you do all day. Yours, or inherited?
- 6. Body. How you show up, dress, care for yourself. And who it's actually for.
- 7. Voice. What you say out loud vs. what you actually think. Mind the gap.

Most of the time, misalignment is hiding in three or four of these. The other three or four are actually fine. Your job in the next few chapters is to figure out which is which.

Before you can do that, you need a way to tell what's you and what isn't. That's Chapter 5.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Without thinking too hard, which of the seven areas do you already suspect is the most misaligned?
Trust the first answer.

Where you are right now.

Ten questions. Ten minutes.

For each statement, give yourself a number from 1 to 5.

1 = This mostly feels inherited, automatic, or no longer like me.

3 = I'm not sure. Some of it fits. Some of it doesn't.

5 = This mostly feels chosen, current, and like me.

There are no good or bad answers here. A low number does not mean you have failed. It only tells you where your life may need a closer look.

When you are finished, circle your three lowest numbers. Those are the places we will look at first.

1 = mostly inherited or automatic · 3 = mixed or unclear · 5 = mostly chosen and current

1. The roles I play every day feel chosen and current, not inherited or performed.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

2. My days are built around how my energy actually works, not around everyone else's needs first.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

3. My home looks like the woman I am now.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

4. My closest relationships feel chosen, not held together only by history or habit.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

5. My work feels like mine, not something I fell into and never re-chose.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

1 = mostly inherited or automatic · 3 = mixed or unclear · 5 = mostly chosen and current

6. The way I dress and present myself feels like me.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

7. What I say out loud usually matches what I actually think.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

8. When I say yes, it is usually because I want to.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

9. My free time includes me, not only everyone else's leftovers.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

10. When I move through my day, the life I am living feels like mine.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

My total: / 50

The three statements I scored lowest on:

The one or two map areas these point to:

HOW TO READ WHAT YOU WROTE

40–50

Most of your life still looks like you. Good. You do not need to pull apart everything. Use the rest of this guide on the one area that still feels off.

25–39

Some of your life is yours. Some of it is still running on an older version of you. This is the messy middle. The rest of this guide is built for this.

10–24

A lot of your life may be running on expectations, roles, or choices that no longer fit. This is not a judgment. It is useful information. You can see enough now to begin moving one thing at a time.

NOW LOOK AT YOUR THREE LOWEST NUMBERS.

Those are not three things you need to fix. They are the first three places you are going to examine.

HOW THE TEN QUESTIONS BECOME THE SEVEN AREAS

The ten questions help you notice your life from a few different angles. The map gathers what you found into seven places.

10 STATEMENTS → 7 AREAS → 1 MISALIGNMENT MAP → 1 SMALL MOVE

AREA	THE STATEMENTS IT GATHERS
Roles	The roles I play every day.
Schedule	My days, my yes, and my free time.
Home	My home.
Relationships	My closest relationships.
Work	My work.
Body	The way I dress and present myself.
Voice	What I say out loud and what I edit out.
The life itself	Use this as your overall check. It may point to more than one area.

If two low answers belong in the same area, keep them together.

For example: if “My days” and “My free time” are both low, they both belong under Schedule.

You are not looking for seven problems. You are looking for the one or two areas that feel loudest.

Your voice vs. the voice you learned.

Before you can map what's yours and what isn't, you need a way to tell the difference. Most women can't, and it's not their fault. You've absorbed so many voices, rules, and roles over the years that you've lost track of which thoughts are originally yours.

Here's the test that works. For each piece of your life, ask:

Where did this come from?

Not do I like it. Not does it feel right. Those questions are too easy to bullshit.

If you can name where it came from. Your mother, your marriage, your church, who you were at 25. That's not necessarily wrong. But it came from outside you, and you need to actively decide whether you'd still build it the same way without that source.

If you can't name the source, either it's actually yours, or you've absorbed it so deeply you've forgotten. Push harder. When did you start doing it this way? Who were you around? What season were you in?

A few examples from my own life. I kept a schedule built entirely around being available to everyone. I told myself I liked being the reliable one. The truth was I'd inherited it from the version of me that needed to be needed. When I sat with what my week would look like without that inheritance, it looked different.

I answered 'how are you' with 'good, busy' for years. Nothing in that answer was mine. It was the answer that kept every conversation comfortable.

None of this makes the people who shaped you wrong. It just wasn't you.

That's the test. Not is this good. Is this mine.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Pick one piece of your life. Any piece. Ask where it came from. Don't move on until you've named the source or sat with the fact that you can't find one.

The receipts.

This is where you start making a list.

Take the three questions you scored lowest on in Chapter 4. For each one, identify the specific piece of your life it points to. The role. The commitment. The relationship. The rule. Be specific. Not 'my schedule in general.' The actual Tuesday obligation. The actual answer you give. The actual person.

Then for each piece, fill in: when you first started doing it this way. The source it most likely came from. What you'd do differently if it had never been handed to you. Whether it's still right for you now.

This is the receipts work. You're naming the inheritance. Not so you can be mad about it. So you can see it.

Most women resist this because it feels like blaming their mother, or their marriage, or admitting they didn't think for themselves. None of that's true.

You weren't weak for absorbing what you absorbed. You were becoming. That's how it works. The problem isn't that you absorbed. The problem is that the season that required it ended years ago and the life still operates like it didn't.

Writing it down is how it ends. You can't move what you can't see, and you can't see it until you name where it came from.

Use Worksheet 2 in the back. Fill it in for all three pieces before moving on.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Of your three pieces, which one are you most reluctant to write down the source for? That's usually the one to write down first.

The Misalignment Map.

This is the artifact. The piece of paper you'll be holding when this workbook ends.

On one page, you fill in seven boxes. One for each area. Each box has two halves.

The diagnostic gave you ten ways to notice the misfit. This map gathers what you found into the seven areas where it actually lives.

LEFT SIDE: What this looks like in my life right now.

RIGHT SIDE: What this would look like if it were shaped by me, not by what I absorbed.

The right side might look almost identical to the left. That's fine. It means this area is already you. The space between the two sides, across all seven areas, is the work.

A few things before you fill it in. The right side is not your fantasy version. Not the run-away-to-a-new-city version. It's the smallest, most honest answer to: what would I do here if no one had told me how?

If you can't fill in the right side for an area, leave it blank. Chapter 10 is for that.

Don't change anything in your life yet. We're still seeing.

Do one area per sitting. Half an hour each. You'll have the full map within a week. Fill it in by hand if you can. Typing makes this feel like a planning exercise, and it isn't. This is closer to a confession than a spreadsheet.

When the map is complete, look at it for a long time. Don't analyze it. Just look.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

After you've filled in the map, which gap is the biggest? Which is the smallest? The smallest one is where we start. Not the biggest.

ONE REAL EXAMPLE

Inherited rule:

“My schedule should stay open for everyone else.”

WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE NOW

I say yes to every request. Most evenings are spoken for. I have no time that belongs to me before someone else needs something.

WHAT IT WOULD LOOK LIKE IF SHAPED BY ME

One evening each week is left empty. I do not explain or apologize for protecting it.

The smallest move:

I decline one Thursday obligation and leave the evening empty.

What I am watching for:

Does the empty space feel like relief, guilt, boredom, fear, or something else?

After seven days:

I notice what changes when one part of the week is not built around everyone else.

YOUR TURN

You do not need to start with the biggest gap. Start with the smallest honest thing you could move this week.

Thinking about it won't move it.

I want to say this directly because it's where I lost months on my own version of this work.

You can spend a long time analyzing the map. Thinking about it. Journaling about it. Talking it through with your friend who gets it. You can make the map more detailed. You can color-code it.

None of that moves the map.

The map gets moved by a thing you do in the life. A standing commitment cancelled. A true answer given out loud. A drawer cleared. A Tuesday left empty because Tuesday is the day your energy collapses.

Small actions. Specific. Visible. Done by Friday.

This sounds obvious. I'm saying it anyway because the trap of this kind of work is that you can spend a year mapping and remapping and feeling like you're doing the work. The map is not the work. The map is the diagnostic. The work is moving one thing.

You're not going to think your way out of this. You're not going to journal your way out of it either. You're going to do one thing.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Right now, looking at your map, what's the smallest thing you could move this week? Not the biggest. The smallest. The one you could finish by Friday.

The one-move method.

The protocol is small enough to fit inside a real week.

- 1. Look at the map.
- 2. Choose the smallest gap.
Pick one item where the gap between LEFT and RIGHT is small. Not your biggest misalignment.
Your smallest.
- 3. Pick a move that closes it by about 20 percent.
Not 100. Twenty.
- 4. Schedule it within 48 hours.
- 5. Do it.
- 6. Hold it for seven days.
Don't change anything else.
- 7. Return to the map.

Why this works. Most women try to reinvent, relocate, or burn-it-all-down their way to a life that fits.

Big changes are easy to promise and hard to hold. Most people go hard for a few weeks, then quietly return to the old shape.

Small is easier to keep. Repeatable is what changes a life. Move one thing and see what happens.

A few examples of small moves.

- Cancel the standing commitment you dread, and replace it with nothing
- Answer 'how are you' with the true answer, once, to one safe person
- Clear one shelf or drawer that belongs to a version of you that's gone
- Say no without an explanation attached. Once.
- Take back one hour on the calendar and put nothing in it
- Wear the thing you keep saving for a version of your life that never arrives
- Tell one person one true thing you've been editing out

Pick yours. Do it by Friday. Use Worksheet 4 in the back.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

The move you just picked. Are you 95 percent sure you'll actually do it? If you're less than that, pick a smaller move. The point is to keep the promise, not to be impressive.

When “you” feels blurry.

This chapter is for when you sit down to fill in the right side of the map and you don't know what you would do.

This is common. It doesn't mean you're broken. It means you've been so many versions for so many people that you can't easily find the un-absorbed one. You're not lost. You're buried.

Three things help.

Look at the unperformed parts of your life.

How you'd cook a meal you actually want to eat. What you do in the first ten minutes when the house is finally empty. How you talk to the friend you've known longest. How you'd spend a Saturday with no one to answer to. These places hold unstyled versions of how you operate. Watch them. Notice the patterns. Bring one back into the main life.

Strip the inputs.

For 14 days, no self-improvement content. No podcasts telling you who to become. No feeds full of women living louder. Read fiction. Walk. Cook. By the end of 14 days, when you sit down with the area you couldn't fill in, something usually surfaces. Your own thinking has space to come forward when other people's thinking isn't filling the channel.

Ask a smaller question.

Instead of 'what would my life look like if it were truly me,' ask 'what's the next thing I would choose, knowing everything I know now, if I were starting today?' The big question has too many right answers, which is why your mind goes blank. The small one usually has one or two.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Which of the three moves above is the one you don't want to do? That's usually the one you need most. Probably the input strip.

When you slip back into performing.

You will slip back. Someone will need you and you'll snap into the old role before you notice. You'll hear about another woman's routine, her renovation, her reinvention, and immediately want to install her life on top of yours. You'll spend two days becoming her before Wednesday morning, when the dopamine wears off, you realize it isn't yours.

This is normal. The pull to perform is stronger than the discipline to stay yourself, especially in low-confidence weeks. You don't fix it by being harder on yourself.

The repair is short.

1. Notice it. 'I just spent two days rearranging my life after one conversation.' 2. Stop. Don't undo anything yet. 3. Look at your map. 4. Ask: does what I started doing close a gap on my map, or create a new one? 5. If it creates one, set it down. It was a performance, not a move. 6. If it closes one, keep it.

The script when you catch yourself mid-slip:

I noticed I started [the thing] after [the trigger]. I'm going to wait three days. If I still want it, and it closes a gap on my map, I'll continue. If not, I'll let it go.

No drama. No 'I'm so bad at this.' Just the protocol.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

Which person or input, when you're around them, most reliably pulls you back into the old role? Naming them is half the work.

The 30-day check.

The check takes ten minutes. Do it on the same day every month.

Five questions.

1. What did I add to my life in the last 30 days?
2. Of those things, what looks like me?
3. What got added because someone expected it and I reacted?
4. What's one thing I want to move on the map this month?
5. What's one thing that's now actually closed?

Write the answers down. Save them somewhere you'll see them.

After three rounds of this, you'll see a pattern. The pattern is more useful than any new plan. For most women, the pattern is one specific input. A particular person, a particular feed, a particular room they walk into. Something that consistently pulls them out of their own life. Once you can name it, you can decide what to do about it.

Use Worksheet 5 in the back.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

If you did this check today, what's the one thing you'd write down as having been added because someone expected it and you reacted?

When advice tries to pull you out.

The hardest part of staying inside your own life is other people's confidence.

Someone will tell you, very surely, what you should do. Your mother. Your sister. The friend whose life looks sorted. They will be right that it works. For someone. They will not know that it isn't you. You'll hear the certainty in their voice and start to doubt the map.

And here's the complicated part. Some of these people are invested in the old version of you. Not maliciously. The old you was convenient. She said yes. She held things together. When you move, their life moves too, and some advice is really a request to move back.

The protocol.

1. Acknowledge it's probably good advice. For someone. 2. Note the source. Is this a person whose life looks like yours wants to? Or someone comfortable with who you were? 3. Run it against your map. Does adopting it close a gap or create one? 4. If it closes a gap, adopt it. 5. If it creates one, say thank you and don't. You don't owe an explanation. You don't need to be right about why.

You will disappoint some people by declining good advice. You will gain a life that looks like you. That is the trade. There's no version of this work that lets you say yes to everyone and still ends with your life being yours.

Use Worksheet 6 in the back for advice you're not sure what to do with.

DIAGNOSTIC PROMPT

What's one piece of advice you've adopted recently that you're now not sure about? Run it through the filter.

The standard going forward.

You're done with this workbook when you can ask yourself one question and answer it honestly.

If I drew my life on a piece of paper today, would it look like me?

Some of you, having done the work, can now answer yes, mostly. A few gaps remain. That's fine. You have the protocol. You move one piece at a time. The map stays current. The check happens monthly.

You won't reach perfect alignment. That's not the goal. An aligned life isn't a life with no discomfort and no challenges. It's a life where you know your hell yes and your hell no, and where the parts that aren't you are parts you've chosen. Not parts you absorbed.

The standard isn't does this feel good. The standard is does this look like me on paper. The feel-good question is too easy to manipulate. The looks-like-me question is harder to dodge. That's why we use it.

And remember what this season actually is. Life has a way of stripping us back. Heartbreak, burnout, loss, outgrowing. Whether you wanted it or not. You're not starting over. You're starting fresh, from what's actually there.

You have everything you need.

You didn't lose yourself. You just left yourself out. Now you're back in.

BEFORE YOU GO

What the map can't do.

The map can show you what no longer fits. It can show you which roles, commitments, rules, and answers are still being run by an older version of you.

But sometimes the map gets you to a question it cannot answer alone:

"Okay. If I stop building around what isn't mine, what do I do now?"

That is not a workbook question. That is a conversation.

THE TRANSITION SESSION

A private 75-minute session for the thing you cannot see clearly from inside it.

You bring the decision you keep circling, the role that no longer fits, the part of your life that has gone flat, or the feeling that something has changed and you cannot yet say what comes next.

Together, we name what no longer fits and find one move you are actually going to make.

You leave with:

- A clearer sense of what no longer fits.
- One thing named out loud.
- One small move you are actually going to make.
- This guide to return to afterward.

One session. We name what no longer fits. One move you are actually going to make.

75 minutes · $222

BOOK YOUR TRANSITION SESSION

WORKSHEETS

Fill these in by hand if you can.

WORKSHEET 1 · THE DIAGNOSTIC

1 = mostly inherited or automatic · 3 = mixed or unclear · 5 = mostly chosen and current

1. The roles I play every day feel chosen and current, not inherited or performed.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

2. My days are built around how my energy actually works, not around everyone else's needs first.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

3. My home looks like the woman I am now.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

4. My closest relationships feel chosen, not held together only by history or habit.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

5. My work feels like mine, not something I fell into and never re-chose.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

1 = mostly inherited or automatic · 3 = mixed or unclear · 5 = mostly chosen and current

6. The way I dress and present myself feels like me.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

7. What I say out loud usually matches what I actually think.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

8. When I say yes, it is usually because I want to.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

9. My free time includes me, not only everyone else's leftovers.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

10. When I move through my day, the life I am living feels like mine.

☐ 1 ☐ 2 ☐ 3 ☐ 4 ☐ 5

My total: / 50

The three statements I scored lowest on:

The one or two map areas these point to:

WORKSHEET 2 · THE RECEIPTS · PIECE 1

Area:

The specific piece of my life this points to:

When I first started doing it this way:

The source (person, season, place) I most likely got it from:

What I would do differently if it had never been handed to me:

Is this still right for me?

☐ Yes

☐ No

☐ Not sure

WORKSHEET 2 · THE RECEIPTS · PIECE 2

Area:

The specific piece of my life this points to:

When I first started doing it this way:

The source (person, season, place) I most likely got it from:

What I would do differently if it had never been handed to me:

Is this still right for me?

☐ Yes

☐ No

☐ Not sure

WORKSHEET 2 · THE RECEIPTS · PIECE 3

Area:

The specific piece of my life this points to:

When I first started doing it this way:

The source (person, season, place) I most likely got it from:

What I would do differently if it had never been handed to me:

Is this still right for me?

☐ Yes

☐ No

☐ Not sure

WORKSHEET 3 · THE MISALIGNMENT MAP

Seven areas. The gap between what is there now and what would be yours, across all seven, is the work.

NOW → THE GAP → SHAPED BY ME

1. ROLES

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

2. SCHEDULE

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

3. HOME

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

NOW → THE GAP → SHAPED BY ME

4. RELATIONSHIPS

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

5. WORK

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

6. BODY

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

NOW → THE GAP → SHAPED BY ME

7. VOICE

WHAT THIS LOOKS LIKE IN MY LIFE RIGHT NOW

WHAT THIS WOULD LOOK LIKE IF IT WERE SHAPED BY ME

THE SMALLEST GAP I CAN SEE

When the map is complete, look at it for a long time. Don't analyze it. Just look.

WORKSHEET 4 · THE ONE-MOVE PROTOCOL

One small move. One week. Don't change anything else.

This week's move:

Which area on the map this addresses:

The smallest action that closes the gap by about 20 percent:

By when:

What I'm leaving alone for the next seven days:

Notes after seven days (what changed, what stayed, what I noticed):

WORKSHEET 5 · THE 30-DAY CHECK

Ten minutes. Same day every month. Write the answers down.

Date:

1. What I added to my life in the last 30 days:

2. What looks like me:

3. What got added because someone expected it and I reacted:

4. What I want to move on the map this month:

5. What's actually closed now:

WORKSHEET 6 · THE ADVICE FILTER

Run new advice through this before adopting it.

The advice:

Who it came from:

Does their life look like what mine wants to be?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Unsure

Does adopting this close a gap on my map, or create one?

☐ Close ☐ Create ☐ Unsure

My decision:

If close: adopt it. If create: let it go. If unsure: wait 72 hours and run the filter again before doing anything.

THE WORK CONTINUES.

You now have the map. You have the protocol. You have the standard.

The misfit doesn't fix itself. You won't journal your way out of it. You won't manifest your way out of it. You won't read your way out of it.

You move one thing. You hold it for a week. You check the map. You move the next thing.

That's it. That's the whole work.

The life you want is the one that looks like you on paper. Not the one that feels good for an hour after a podcast. Not the one everyone else is comfortable with.

The one that looks like you.

Go put yourself back in.